

THE RED, WHITE AND BLUE.

"Springing and Bright."
The stars of morn,
On our banner borne,
With the fire of Heaven are blended;
The red and white stripes—
The emblem of our freedom.
And by us they shall be defended:
Then has the true Blue,
The stars of the constellation,
Its salts as it sailed,
By our heroes have bailed,
Our battle that made us a nation!
What hand so bold
As ours from its fold
One star or one stripe of its brightness;
For him in those stars
Each star is a terrible lightning,
And each stripe a terrible storm.
Shall ride the storm
Till the heretofore foes surrender—
The storm gone by
Is still in the sky;
A rainbow of peace and splendor!
Though our motto unfurled,
Is "peace to the world";
We shun not the field that is gory;
At home or abroad,
Feeding on our God,
We'll serve our own pathway to glory!
Then shall the true Blue,
Red, White and Blue,
The Sagittarius constellation;
It salts as it sailed,
By our forefathers bailed,
Our battles that made us a nation!

The Atlantic Monthly for April.

The April Atlantic has an excellent bill of fare. The leading contribution is from the pen of C. C. Maxwell, and bears the alliterative title of "Fighting Facts for Fogies." It proves by historical facts that aged Generals and not young ones are most successful in the field.

Gall Hamilton contributes, under the title of "Plator Ignorant," what is, in fact, a review of a recently published life of William Blake, an engraver, artist, and poet of the last century.

Oliver Wendell Holmes has a political essay called "Our Progressive Independence," principally discussing the views entertained toward us, during the war, by the Europeans.

"The First Visit to Washington" is a very singular and interesting article, by an anonymous writer, giving an account of the first visit to the National Capital of the present Secretary of the Treasury. He was then a poor boy, without money or influence. This was in 1835, and in December of that year he advertised in the National Intelligencer for pupils for "select classical school." All Washington will of course desire to read how Salmon P. Chase succeeded in his endeavors by the aid of the press.

Mrs. Stowe, in another of her "House and Home Papers," maintains that in house-furnishing nothing is more economical than beauty; and urges the purchase of photographs or lithographs of the recognized masterpieces of art for house-adornment.

Fitz Hugh Ludlow gives the most entertaining and lively account of experience "Among the Mormons" that we have yet read.

This unusually brilliant number of the Atlantic contains, also, "The Wreck of River worth," by John G. Whittier; "The Schoolmaster's Story," by A. M. Dyer; "The Black Preacher," by James Russell Lowell; "Fouquet the Magnificent," by F. Sheldon; "Or Picket Duty," and the usual Reviews and Literary Notices.

Southern Suspension of Habeas Corpus.
We announced several weeks ago that the rebel Congress had passed a bill suspending the habeas corpus. The New Orleans Delta furnishes the following summary of the act, which is to remain in force for ninety days after the meeting of the next rebel Congress:

The act is entitled "A bill to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases, and to provide for the trial of persons held in confinement under the Confederate Constitution which provides for the suspension of the writ; declares that the power of suspending it is vested solely in Congress; unless, within fifteen (15) days from this date, they appear before the Military Commission in session in this city, of which Brigadier General Huie, United States volunteers, is president, and make satisfactory defense to the charges against them:

That, during the present invasion of the Confederate States, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus be, and the same is hereby suspended; but such suspension shall apply only to the cases of persons arrested or detained by order of the President, Secretary of War, or the general commanding of the Trans-Mississippi Military Department, or by the President, and under the control of the President. It is hereby declared that the purpose of Congress in the passage of this act is to provide more effectually for the public safety, by suspending the writ of habeas corpus in the following cases, and no other:

1. Of treason, or treasonable efforts, or combinations to overthrow the Government of the Confederacy.

2. Of conspiracies to overthrow the Government, or conspiracies to resist the lawful authority of the Confederate States.

3. Of combining to assist the enemy, or of communicating intelligence to the enemy, or giving him aid, or comfort.

4. Of conspiracies, preparations, and attempts to commit rebellion.

5. Of desertions or courageous deserts, of harboring deserters, and of attempts to avoid military service. Provided, that in cases of palpable wrong and oppression by any subordinate officer, upon any party who does not legally owe military service, his superior officer shall grant prompt relief of the oppressed party, and the subordinate shall be dismissed from office.

6. Of spies and other emissaries of the enemy.

7. Of holding correspondence or intercourse with the enemy, without necessity, and without the permission of the Confederate States.

8. Of unlawful trading with the enemy and other offenses against the laws of the Confederate States, enacted to promote their success in the rebellion.

9. Of conspiracies, or attempts to liberate prisoners of war held by the Confederate States.

10. Of conspiracies, or attempts or preparations to aid the enemy.

11. Of persons aiding or inciting others to abandon the Confederate cause, or to叛离 the enemy.

12. Of arson, or burning, destroying, or injuring any bridge, or railroad, or telegraph line of communication, or other property with the intent of aiding the enemy.

13. Of treasonable designs to impair the military power of the government by destroying or attempting to destroy the vessels or arms, or munitions of war, or arsenals, foundries, workshops, or other property of the Confederate States.
